

Dr. Terry James

Dr. James has been a dedicated member and leader of the national ATE for more than 40 years. Through his many contributions, James has engaged the membership in critical conversations addressing the challenges in education and helped orchestrate vital changes that have advanced ATE. He has served on governance committees, tasks forces, and research commissions. Plus, he has served as chair of many conference planning committees. James has served on the Board of Directors and as president of the association. Additionally, he has served as president of both the Tennessee and Arkansas ATE state units as well as the Southeastern Regional Association of Teacher Educators. Many new ATE members were recruited and/or mentored by James reflected by the strong membership represented by UCA faculty.

He was honored with the 2012 ATE Distinguished Member Award – the first Arkansan to receive this award.

He joined the University of Central Arkansas in 1991 and has served several faculty and administrative roles in the College of Education and Academic Affairs. In 2005, he became the founding chair of the Department of Leadership Studies.
